WAR FORCED U. S. INTO SIXTH PLACE

Personnel Increased, Target Practice Better and

Washington, Aug. 27.—Secretary
Daniels, in a letter made public to-day, presents a long defence of the treatment of the navy during the Wilson Administration comparing his received the navy form with those of previous administration, comparing his received the new policy of a continuing. We have been increased the limits of a continuing and the limits of the limits limits of the limits of the limits of the limits of limits of the limits of l when the United States became second in size and strength and when the United States lost second position: "'(a) Considering displacement of ships built, the United States advanced

"(b) Considering displacement of ships built and building, the United States advanced from third to second place in 1909, held this place for a short time only, and dropped to third place again in the same year, 1909.

"(c) Considering active personnel, the United States advanced from third to second place in 1908, dropped to third place in 1911 and to fourth place in 1913. The United States advanced again to third place in the first part of 1914 and later that year dropped to sixth place, owing to the expansion of the naval personnel of belligerent nations."

When United States Lost Rating. "The United States lost second place because Germany built ships rapidly while the United States contented itwhile the United States contented itself with a small programme of naval construction. In 1903 the General Board urged the adoption of a programme providing for the construction of two battleships a year. If that plan had been carried out, by 1919 we would have had forty-eight battleships and would have kept our place.
But in 1905 the Secretary of the Navy
(Mr. Bonaparte) asked for only one battleship, and in his message to Congress in the same year President Roosevelt said, in order to maintain and increase the then standard effimodesevent said, in order to maintain and increase the then standard efficiency of the navy it did not seem necessary, however, that the navy should—at least in the immediate future—be increased beyond the prespert in target practice. Admiral Fletcher says the recent practices were held at ranges of from 16,000 to 18,000 yards, which are the longest ranges at which firing has occurred in the present European war, and 'tis believed that scores recorded are higher than ever before in the open sca.' Captain Pinnett, director of target practice "came up about 40 per cent.' Captain Pinnett, director of target practice, says, The records of the fall of 1915 indicate that we are advancing by leeps and bounds."

Relative to fighting craft, Mr. Daniels has this to say:

"What has the Wilson Administration done for this chief need? They have also produced a large cailbre gun that will shoot straighter, whill shape passed. In the first two bills appropriations were made for five dreadnoughts, as against there in the last two years of Taft's Administration. There were like increases in destroyers and submarines. The following is a comparative table showing the number of the various classes of vessels for which appropriations were made during the Roosevelt, Taft and Wilson administrations:

After quoting figures to show that the health of the naval personnel has improved and that the percentage of desertions has decreased, Mr. Daniels continues:

"The navy was short of officers when Wilson came into office. Vhy? Because each Congressman was authorized to appoint only one midshipman to Annapolis. In May of 1913 Congress extended the law, which Republicans had let expire, giving two appointments to each Congressman. This year Congress has made an increase so that each Senator and Representative has three appointments to Annapolis. This is an increase of over:

In his 1907 message President Roosevelt wrote to Congress: "I do not ask that we continue to increase our navy. I merely ask that it be maintained at its present strength.' At that time the General Board was insisting upon two to three new battleships each year, but their recommendation was carefully pigeonholed and not permitted to reach the public.

"When Wilson was inaugurated the havy was short of single, short of munitions, short of aircraft, and behind in target practice."
